

331-754 Optimally Fluoridated Public Water Systems

Is My Water Floridated?

Use this table to find out if your drinking water is fluoridated. First, find the county you live in, then the city, and look for your public water system (PWS) name. You can find most PWS names on your utility bill. If you don't receive a bill, you can check with a homeowner's association, landlord, or leasing company, or the city or county you live in. Once the water system information is found, compare it to this table. If you are served by a listed system, then your water is optimally fluoridated.

The U.S. Public Health Service (PHS) recommendation for fluoride concentration in drinking water for the prevention of cavities is 0.7 mg/L, which is often referred to as "optimally fluoridated drinking water."

To be considered optimally fluoridated, a public water system must deliver fluoridated water to all the full-time residential population the system serves. A water system does this in two ways: by adjusting the level of fluoride in all the water it serves (fluoride source = "Fluoridated") or purchasing water from a system who fluoridates all of its water (fluoride source = "Intertied"). If a system listed below is designated as Intertie, purchases water AND has sources of its own, it also adjusts water in its own sources to be considered providing optimally fluoridated water.

We support fluoridation of drinking water as a sound, population-based public health measure. See Washington State Health Office Tao Sheng Kwan-Gett, MD MPH statement on community water fluoridation.
